Society of Hispanic Professional Engineers establish themselves on campus

BY PRESLEY DEPUGH
Arts & Life Editor

The Society of Hispanic Professional Engineers (SHPE) was an organization founded in Los Angeles, California in 1974. Rodrigo “Rod” Garcia gathered a cohort of Hispanic engineers and “held a meeting in his garage to determine how they could contribute to diversifying the STEM field,” according to SHPE’s story.

SHPE currently has over 13,000 members, 260 sponsors and partners and 286 professional and student chapters. One of those student chapters is now in the University of New Haven campus.

Raymond Feliz, a senior civil engineering major and the university’s SHPE executive assistant, said that when he and others were trying to start up the organization on campus, they only had three people. “We’re getting a lot of members,” said Feliz after witnessing the good turnout for their general meeting held this past Thursday. Having good turnout for events is something that Carolina Sousa De La Cruz, a senior computer science major and the university’s SHPE president, finds important in order to grow the organization at New Haven.

De La Cruz said that Feliz approached her with the motivation to start SHPE up on campus, and at that time, there was a small number of people part of this initiative, with many who were interested but graduated before it could truly be formed.

“I just want to see it grow and some future plans that we do have [are] getting some more outreach so we can get more members and making sure that we can keep going as a club,” said De La Cruz.

De La Cruz also touched upon why having a campus organization dedicated to fostering Hispanic engineers is important. “There’s so many engineers who are in the Hispanic community and I just want to make sure that we have as many opportunities that we can facilitate,” said De La Cruz.

“Just seeing it grow” is something that De La Cruz looks forward to with the campus organization, as it will bring many opportunities such as internships and other professional growth opportunities, such as the national SHPE’s InternSHPE program.

Aside from outreaching with the national SHPE, De La Cruz also has plans for collaborating with other student organizations and clubs, one of them being the Society of Women Engineers (SWE). Outreach to organizations such as SWE should help grow the campus’s SHPE and get their name across campus, according to De La Cruz.

For those who are interested in joining the U. of New Haven’s SHPE organization, they hold general meetings every Thursday at 4 p.m. Their events can be seen on their Charger Connection page.

MARB implements financial management firm in West Haven

BY ERIN SMITH
Politics Editor

The Municipal Accountability Review Board (MARB) is a state board that provides oversight to financially distressed municipalities. West Haven was moved to the board's highest tier last April after $900,000 in a $1.15 million federal grant for pandemic relief was misspent. MARB controls bond ordinances, budget transfers, contracts greater than $50,000 and has the right to appoint a finance manager, who will work in city hall to give advice and mandates.

To help West Haven with finances, MARB implemented a financial management firm. In August, a contract was formed with Protiviti Government Services, a Virginia-based subsidiary of management consulting Robert Half. There has been a meeting with Protiviti officials and stakeholders to begin their work here in West Haven.

The executive finance manager of the state Office of Policy and Management, Kimberly Kennison said, "I'm very excited about this, and also being able to help the city move forward and address those items that need immediate attention."

The contract was obtained by the New Haven Register and Protiviti will be paid $1.4 million for the work done in West Haven. This will be paid by state funds that are available because of Tier IV related expenses. The contract will be in effect until March 31, 2025.

Additionally, the new contract enforces that there needs to be a financial manager, "In addition to monitoring city activities and operations for compliance with Tier IV requirements, the financial manager is expected to carry out certain MARB powers to be delegated by the board, to ensure the implementation of measures designed to improve or correct financial operations and to monitor the city's adoption of those measures."

The main contributions that Protiviti will be adding to the town are to support the MARB in its oversight of West Haven and provide the city with project management support and coaching.

A financial analysis of West Haven has been prepared to serve as a road map for Protiviti which was commissioned by the MARB. The results of the analysis have not been made public yet since the information could make West Haven susceptible to attack according to MARB officials.

The MARB is expected to make all decisions and Protiviti's role according to the contract is "limited to advice and project management support."

This is the first time the state Office of Policy and Management will be placing a financial management liaison in West Haven since it escalated to a Tier IV municipality. Making it unclear how much legal authority the state can mandate to make sure the city complies.

"My administration will provide the financial manager leadership with no excuses and without delay as has been the status quo of the Rossi administration," Barry Lee Cohen, the winner of the Republican mayoral primary, said. "The sooner we show good faith and comply with the MARB mandates, the better."

The Democratic mayoral nominee, state Rep. Dorinda Borer said on the topic, "Robert Half has a strong reputation and I think it's great we will have that financial support on the ground." Although, she also said, "It's my goal however if elected to build trust and confidence amongst MARB through my constructive collaborative actions and demonstrate that we have the ability to manage our own City. We should be able to do that long before 2025."

Protiviti Government Services may be a step in the right direction for West Haven after mishandling finances over the last few years.

HOC to hold first Biden impeachment inquiry next week

BY FAITH ARCURI
Staff Writer

The House Oversight Committee will hold its first hearing on Thursday, Sept. 28 in their impeachment inquiry into President Joe Biden.

The hearing is expected to focus on "constitutional and legal questions" surrounding the allegations of Biden's involvement in his son Hunter's overseas businesses, according to a spokesperson for the Oversight Committee.

Republicans, led by House Speaker Kevin McCarthy, have contended that Biden's actions from his time as vice president show a "culture of corruption" and that his son used the "Biden brand" to advance his business with foreign clients.

"Once all the i's are dotted, t's are crossed, I expect to issue a subpoena to Hunter and James Biden's personal bank records," Comer said as he left the House GOP conference meeting Tuesday."

McCarthy appointed Comer to lead the inquiry in coordination with Judiciary Committee Chairman Jim Jordan and Ways & Means Chairman Jason Smith. The spokesperson also said that chairman of Oversight, Rep. James Comer (R-Ky.), plans to issue subpoenas for the personal and business bank records of Hunter Biden and the president's brother James Biden "as early as this week."

Comer also said the hearing would include an overview of what an impeachment inquiry is and would feature appearances from experts on financial crimes, tax evasion, racketeering and the Foreign Agent Registration Act.

The White House has called the effort by House Republicans in the midst of the presidential campaign "extreme politics at its worst."

"Staging a political stunt hearing in the waning days before they may shut down the government reveals their true priorities: To them, baseless personal attacks on President Biden are more important than preventing a government shutdown and the pain it would inflict on American families," Ian Sams, a White House spokesman, said in a statement on Tuesday.

McCarthy launched the inquiry within the House vote and it's unclear if he will have enough support to approve it from his slim GOP majority. Some lawmakers have criticized the evidence so far as not reaching the Constitution's bar of "high crimes and misdemeanors."

Republicans have focused much of their attention on an unverified tip to the FBI that alleged a bribery scheme involving Biden during his time as vice president. The bribery claim emerged during former president Donald Trump's first impeachment in 2019 and relates to the allegation that Biden pressured Ukraine to fire its top prosecutor in order to stop an investigation into Burisma, the oil and gas company where Hunter Biden was part of the board.

Democrats have countered that the Justice Department investigated the Burisma claim when Trump was president and closed the matter after eight months due to insufficient evidence to pursue it further. Other countries were also pushing for the firing of the Ukrainian official for viewing him as corrupt. A former business partner of Hunter Biden's has testified to Congress that the bribery allegations are untrue.

Comparison is the destruction of personality

BY MARTIN GOMEZ

College is an opportunity to explore different paths of interest, strengthening skills necessary to get further ahead both in life and in your chosen field of study. Being argumentative as a kid leads to commanding a courtroom, making “potions” develops into evening out chemical properties to record the outcomes and the knowledge that comes with scribbling on the walls turns into finding the perfect gallery space to present your art. College is often a place where many come to grow.

That’s not always the case though. In contrast, some people come to college and develop feelings of inferiority, as if those around them are pursuing fields of greater importance.

It is impossible to keep up with the competition and when you filter in your hopes, dreams and ambitions, you might as well try to bottle a lightning strike or ride a rainbow. In today’s society and economy, it is downright impossible to do what you really want to do.

If I could truly do what I want to do, I would drop out of school and catch a plane. I would fly to either Athens, Barcelona, Capris, or Paris and open a small book/flower store, or move to the south of France and live off the land, or move to a small port city and sell seafood to locals and tourists like in Marcel Pagnol’s Marseilles trilogy. The possibilities are endless, but none of this is achievable because in this world money is everything and in this country, you need an education to have money.

If your interests align with a profession that will undoubtedly make you a lot of money, congratulations, you have won the lottery when it comes to living a happy and successful life. Your success can directly align with your happiness, your happiness being something high paying such as anything in marketing, medical, engineering and anything of the like.

But I pose the questions: “What if your major interests don’t align with anything that makes a lot of money? How will you achieve monetary needs and basic happiness at the same time?”

Speaking from personal experience, when you’re smart in a cinematic, expressive, linguistic and story-telling way, you can feel inferior to those who are smart in a statistical, rational and observational way. There’s no point in comparing apples to oranges, comparing two different but essential paths of intelligence. I understand how hard it is to find value in what you want to do when you feel there is no importance behind it.

My biggest piece of advice would be to simply follow your ambitions and not let your own personal insecurities get in the way of who you are and what you can accomplish.

“Just because my dreams are different than yours it doesn’t mean they’re unimportant.” - Meg March, Little Women.

When it’s time to exit stage left

BY WILLIAM HINCK
Staff Writer

I have always enjoyed theater. I believe in the artistry that every member of the cast, crew and direction undergoes in order to create a vast moving tapestry to tell a story from anywhere. Attending a show grants me the ability to admire the little details that most theatergoers don’t: the costume design, the little quirks in the set that only the crew know and the props that the actors break after five seconds of interaction. I even loved being a part of these productions. Unfortunately, I must put my love in the past tense since as I’ve grown older, I’ve drifted away from this passion.

Theater is, ironically, a lot like sports. As a kid, it’s all about exploring the hobby and maybe even finding a passion for it. You can enjoy your time with it because everyone is aware that this is a silly and fun thing to do despite taking it seriously all the same. I firmly believe that someone can simultaneously enjoy something for its ridiculousness and take it completely seriously when needed.

In fact, the people who solely take both sports and theater way too seriously are slowly killing the very thing they claim to love by chasing away those who love it just as much. There’s always that one parent at a Little League game who’s taking it too seriously, similar to the director or cast member who scowls at the person trying to make the six-hour rehearsals a little more light-hearted.

My theater journey firmly ended once I came to the University of New Haven. In high school, I was passionate about theater and loved every second of it. I loved the cast who bounded like family. I loved the directors who pushed us to do great and ultimately cared about the cast. I loved the crew who were the gears that made the metaphorical clock tick. College theater destroyed that for me. Productions became all about the director and making them look good. It became about the cast othering those who didn’t fit their mold. It began to feel like a dead-end corporate office job but without the pay and benefits.

It was soul crushing and depressing to see this happen to my now former passion, but I realized it was a part of growing up. I still enjoy acting and I still enjoy theater, but I would be lying if I said the flame hasn’t nearly flickered out. Perhaps one day I’ll return to the stage, but for now I’m happy working behind the scenes and supporting theater wherever I go. I can only hope the flame won’t die out.

Myatt Center holds first celebration of World Gratitude Day

BY PRESLEY DEPUGH
Arts & Life Editor

People walking past the Myatt Center for Diversity and Inclusion on Thursday evening heard music streaming out and Diversity Peer Educators (DPEs) dancing. This was all done to reel people in to participate in the Myatt Center's World Gratitude Day celebration.

The World Gratitude Day event was planned by DPEs Riya Sood and Ja'nya Hill.

Hill, a junior forensic psychology major, said, "Riya and I just threw out some ideas of what kind of events we could do for this month. And Riya had the idea of celebrating World Gratitude Day today."

Both Hill and Sood, a graduate student studying public health, noticed World Gratitude Day is not a popular holiday, so they wanted to have the event surrounding it.

There was an interactive presentation made by Hill and Sood that kept the audience engaged.

Sood read a quote from American writer Melody Beattie, who said, "Gratitude turns what we have into enough, and more. It turns denial into acceptance, chaos to order, confusion to clarity. It can turn a meal into a feast, a house into a home, a stranger into a friend."

As the event continued, they went over the meaning of World Gratitude Day, explaining how it is a day for people from diverse backgrounds to come together and express thankfulness for the positive aspects of life.

Hill and Sood also went over how gratitude can be seen and incorporated through diversity and inclusion by acknowledging and celebrating everyone's differences in order to create a more inclusive and empathetic environment, according to the presentation.

There were a couple of mini-games and interactive components where the audience was asked different questions, such as "What made you smile this week?" or "If gratitude were a color, a smell, or a sound, what would it be, and why?"

A chunk of time was carved out for audience members to discuss how they show gratitude to others, and how they receive gratitude from others. Some mentioned doing acts of service, hanging out and spending quality time with friends and giving gifts to their loved ones, among many others in both categories of giving and receiving gratitude.

University of New Haven Financial Wellness Program announces fourth annual Cashpacency Series

BY ALEXIS
DAWKINS-MALDONADO
Staff Writer

Are you struggling with money and worrying about paying off your student loans? Worried about managing funds in general? University of New Haven's Financial Aid office is kickstarting their annual Cashpacency Series.

During an interview with Vanessa Ort, assistant director of the Financial Aid Office, she explained that "cashpencies" is but one piece of a much larger program she calls the Financial Wellness Program. "We are actually a committee of campus partners all across campus, such as residential life and [the Center for Student Engagement, Leadership and Orientation], and we all come together to create programs that support our mission," said Ort. "We want students to understand how your money works and budgets for them."

"Our mission is to provide students with skills, knowledge, and resources to help them make informed decisions for a lifetime of financial well-being," said Ort. "Tuition for college is one of the biggest purchases of your life, and it's a great way to take the next steps on how to be on top of your money."

The program will also support students who are struggling financially as their first time moving away from home. Ort said, "Our goal is to provide tools and resources, the main big program being Cashpencies. We will touch upon different topics all in regard to financial issues such as money management for the first couple of weeks."

For this program students will be allowed to choose what subjects of money management and finances they would like to explore and learn about. "Cashpencies uses iGrad, a financial program where students can answer questions, creating a handmade tailored program for themselves," said Ort.

The program will be once a week during the fall and spring semesters but it will not run during midterms. The Cashpacency Series can be accessed through MyCharger in the Financial Wellness tab. More information about the Cashpacency Series can be found on MyCharger and on their Instagram page, @unewhavenfinwell.

The FAFSA Simplification Act and how it might impact you

BY EDITORIAL STAFF

The Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) Simplification Act will be put into effect leading into the 2024-2025 academic year. The university put out its notice on MyCharger, serving as just one of many locations for students to catch the fleeting wind of this news.

Here's what the changes to the federal aid application look like, and what they might mean for you:

Foremost, the Expected Family Contributions (EFC) section, which typically assessed household income to determine parental or guardian contribution toward a student's education, will be replaced with a new section called the Student Aid Index (SAI). This will remove the factor of other college enrollment from aid determination, removing the discount granted to those who have siblings in the higher education system, but it will calculate external student aid on a new scale, expecting less of a contribution from families than the prior calculation system.

FAFSA will also make changes to their Federal Pell Grant System, which will see to more students being eligible for the grant. This includes incarcerated students, as well as expansions for the federal poverty level and different family sizes.

Additionally, users will find that the form is shorter, and information surrounding tax documentation will be pulled from the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) as opposed to the manual reporting of information.

Discriminatory factors are also set to be removed from the FAFSA, seeing that drug-related convictions are no longer going to disqualify individuals from eligibility. Instead, these questions will no longer be included on the application.

This is in addition to streamlining aid opportunities for students without conventional guardians. Foster, homeless and unaccompanied individuals will be able to calculate their SAI as "provisional independent" students and receive need-based aid that way.

The application will also allow for students to list up to 20 schools of interest — an increase from years prior.

Overall, the aim is to increase the amount of need-based aid granted to students across the coun-

"FAFSA" written on a clipboard.

try. This effort will impact vast numbers of young adults, as nationally over 17.8 million students file a FAFSA application annually.

The FAFSA application for the 2024-2025 academic year will go into effect come December.

A new wave of student leaders

BY EDITORIAL STAFF

Each academic year, organizations across all facets of campus welcome new voices into leadership positions. With that said, it comes with no disagreement that the Undergraduate Student Government Association (USGA) executive board holds the most essential spots for ambitious New Haven students.

Despite the academic term just barely entering full-swing, the USGA e-board has already transformed how student leaders gather on our campus. This past Friday, USGA held yet another General Assembly meeting, the same way that they have been for years. This year, though, things look and feel different than in years prior.

USGA President Darby Brown, alongside the rest of the board, have already been incredibly successful in fostering an open and communicative environment unlike any we have seen in recent years.

Brown sat before those in attendance and reported on her meetings with different faces of the university's administration, including Barbara Lawrence, the new vice president of diversity, equity, inclusion, access and belonging (DEIAB). Brown voiced satisfaction and optimism in all of her meetings thus far. There is an optimism created by student government leaders feeling comfortable speaking freely about conversations that impact the entire student body. This was paired with constant encouragement for other students to reach out to USGA to speak up about what is important to them, a combination which generated a genuine environment for students to feel comfortable using their voices.

This year's Vice President for Community, Advocacy and Diversity Youssef Abdelhamid introduced a new DEIAB campaign called "your words have power." While presenting this initiative, he dove into some of the ways in which this campaign, which had already taken to campus in prior years, was going to be reimagined to foster a space that would not be harmful to any students. This is set to be achieved by the elimination of potentially triggering words in campaign materials that could evoke negative responses by those within the university community. Abdelhamid was mindful, and spoke openly about the concerns with the previous campaign while framing the necessary message behind their new initiatives.

The theme of preserving students' mental health continued up to the administrative level of student affairs. Both Ophelie Rowe-Allen, dean of students and vice president of student affairs, and Alandre Alexis, the assistant director for recognized student associations, took time during their weekly reports to remind students to take care of themselves by hydrating, fulfilling their needs and taking care of their mental health.

The environment created within a student government setting plays a pivotal role in the actions taken by student leaders and other students across campus. The messages conveyed by those within roles that grant them the power to evoke change will guide the ways in which the student body interacts with them. Entering the 2023-2024 academic year, we have full confidence that the USGA e-board has laid down exceptional groundwork to maintain open lines of communication with both students and administration in ways that will transform this campus environment to perfectly reflect the values of the current community, and we are excited to see the path that these leaders pave from now until May.

Charger Athletics weekly recap

New Haven athletics had a jam-packed week as the women's soccer, field hockey and women's volleyball all taking to their home fields as they matched up against Northeast-10 (NE-10) conference opponents.

All three teams came away with wins this week as they continue conference play looking to make a push for the playoffs. More information on these teams can be found at newhaven-chargers.com.

The field hockey team's win over St. Thomas Aquinas pushed their record to 2-4, now sitting at 2-5 after a 3-2 overtime loss to Bentley University.

The women's soccer team has dropped two games in a row as they hold a 3-4 record through the first seven games.

The women's volleyball team has won two of their last three games, pushing them to 5-7 on the young season.

Field Hockey executes on stroke calls for 4-2 win over St. Thomas Aquinas

BY SKYLAR GRIFFIN
Sports Editor

New Haven's field hockey team faced the Spartans of Saint Thomas Aquinas College on Wednesday, Sept. 20, coming off a tough road loss at Franklin Pierce. Senior defender Kelli Jacobson was quick to step up for the team, leading the team with two goals, both scored on penalty strokes.

It was a slow start for the Chargers, with Saint Thomas Aquinas scoring early in the first quarter, taking advantage of a foul outside the circle. Graduate goaltender Halle Reiger saved the first shot, but the forward line for Saint Thomas Aquinas occupied the circle, allowing them to send the ball over the goal line. The Chargers lacked opportunity for the remainder of the first quarter, earning only two shots on goal over the fifteen-minute period.

New Haven regrouped going into the second quarter, led by an unassisted goal from freshman forward Femke Boers. Feeding off this energy, junior midfielders Sophia Ruh and Johannah Lee worked together to take the ball up the field and into the circle. Senior forward Audrey Larson took a shot on goal but was denied by a defender who stopped the ball from behind the goal line. This resulted in a rare stroke call, leaving New Haven to decide which of their players would take the shot. The Chargers put their trust in Jacobson, who stepped up and lifted the ball into the upper-left corner of the goal.

Despite the rarity of stroke calls in field hockey, the call was made again shortly after Jacobson landed her shot. It was a no-brainer for the Chargers to select Jacobson once again for the stroke, which proved successful as she flicked the ball once again too high for the goalkeeper's reach. The score was now 3-1 in favor of the Chargers leading into halftime.

The third quarter proved strong defenses from both teams. There were many offensive opportunities on both ends of the field, yet neither team could land a goal. After the third, the Chargers made a switch in the goal, with freshman goalkeeper Cara Lambert stepping up for her second appearance with the Chargers.

The defense on both sides stayed strong for the first few minutes of the fourth quarter, until an offensive corner from Saint Thomas Aquinas made it a 3-2 game. The Chargers were determined to bring back their two-goal lead, as a free hit from the 16-yard line resulted in a failed aerial attempt from a Saint Thomas Aquinas' defender. Senior Kat Trammel took advantage and passed the ball up the field to junior forward Abby Nixon. Nixon then assisted the final goal of the night courtesy of Larson.

The Chargers now advance to a 2-4 overall record and are 2-1 in the Northeast-10 Conference. The field hockey team will continue with conference play on Saturday, Sept. 23, hosting Bentley University on their home turf. The game will start at 7 p.m., with more information available at NewHavenChargers.com.

New Haven women's soccer falls short, loses 2-0 to Bentley

BY IGNACIO FUENTES
Contributing Writer

After losing 3-0 to Adelphi University last Tuesday, the New Haven women's soccer team was looking to change the page and defeat Bentley University, but that wasn't the case. On Saturday, Sept. 23 at Kathy Zolad Stadium, the New Haven women's soccer team was once again defeated, this time falling to Bentley University by a score of 2-0.

During the first few minutes of the game it looked like both teams were off to a good start. In the 28th minute, sophomore defender Jillian Hendriksen led the Falcons 1-0 with a header off of a corner kick assisted by junior defender Ryenne Feeney. But that didn't stop the Chargers from fighting for the remainder of the game. For the first half of the game, Bentley was able to maintain possession.

The second half of the game saw the Chargers come back with a different mindset and apply pressure to keep Bentley from adding to their lead. With under a minute remaining of the game, the ball bounced off of a New Haven defender and made it 2-0 to secure Bentley's victory over the Chargers.

New Haven was looking to control the ball and maintain defensive pressure on Bentley as they looked to make a comeback, but to no avail as the Falcons were able to cash in on scoring opportunities. Bentley sent eleven shots to the net, with two reaching in the back of the net, as sophomore goalkeeper Caitlin Daley tallied five saves.

New Haven will now head on the road for their upcoming matchup on Wednesday, Sept. 27 to face Pace University. The game is scheduled to kickoff at 7 p.m. as the Chargers look to turn things around and find victory. For more information, you can go on NewHavenChargers.com.
